

ONLY FOUR OUT OF 35 DRAFT ELIGIBLES QUALIFY; 21 ASK EXEMPTION; TEN REJECTED

Third Day's Tests in District No. 6 Reveals Over Half Seeking Discharge.

FOUR WILLING TO SERVE

Twenty-five in All Qualify in the Physical Tests. But of These 21 Ask to Be Relieved From Military Duty; Dependents Claimed by Many.

Of 35 draft eligibles examined by District No. 6 board this morning, 25 qualified in the physical tests and 10 were rejected. Of the 25 qualifying, 21 asked exemption. Dependents, post-office service and religion were the grounds given for exemptions.

Two claims for exemption were made by Clyde Newmyer of Vanderbilt, claiming membership in the church of Seven Day Adventists, and being a student of divinity. Hudson Snyder of Indian Head filed a claim for exemption as he is employed in the transmission of mail by the government. All other claims filed gave dependents.

A telegram received today by the board said that there is a misunderstanding in some quarters as to the acceptance of aliens for the draft army. The telegram said that all aliens not claiming exemption should be accepted, as in serving in the national army they are helping a common cause. In some sections the understanding was that aliens had to take out citizenship papers before they could be accepted for the army. This does not hold good, Washington advises.

In another message received this morning, the board is informed that a man asked not to be turned down because of bad teeth. If the teeth were in any shape for repairs that could be made to them after being enlisted in the draft army, they should be accepted, says the telegram.

A fourth member of the exemption board, who will probably not in more than one district, will be appointed soon. He will receive all information given by applicants for exemption and will determine the truth of the claims. He will check up all exemptions made by the board. The board was advised to have all reasons given by registrants in claiming exemption, printed by newspapers. In this way the public will learn what the claims are, and if it is to anyone's knowledge that they are not true, the exemption board should be informed. For every man exempted, one further down the line is called out and unless untrue exemption claims are exposed registrants that thought themselves safe from draft may find themselves called.

The summary of today's results follows:

L. Guy Garrett, Somerset, aged 24, dependent for support.

Clyde Newmyer, 21, Vanderbilt, student of divinity.

REMARKABLE RECORD FOR PHYSICAL FITNESS IN NO. 1

A remarkable record for physical fitness was made up by draft registrants in District No. 1, comprising Juniata and vicinity, yesterday. Sixty-eight of the 86 men examined were found physically qualified, thus bringing the number of qualified registrants up to 77 in the two days' tests.

Twenty-eight of those examined yesterday did not claim exemption. Exemption claims were made by 40 of the eligibles, principally on grounds of dependents. Two aliens, Italian and Austrian subjects, filed claims for discharge. Three aliens expressed a desire to serve.

Among those accepted were Wilmer Monahan and M. J. Hudoc, well known automobile racers, and two members of the Juniata high school faculty, H. L. Cloutman, director of playgrounds, and A. E. Wright, principal. The latter was excused on account of an injured wrist but the former passed and did not ask exemption.

Draft Notes

A registrant in Uniontown asked exemption on the grounds of "conscientious scruples."

Dunkards or members of any other religious sect that is opposed to war will find that mere statement of membership will not suffice to secure exemption. On Page 4 appears an article stating that an affidavit from the minister of the church to which they belong or the secretary thereof must be presented to show they are in good standing. Thus, men whose parents may be of such religious faith but who themselves "do not work at it" may not be excused.

Popular resentment against wholesale exemption of aliens has manifested itself here and elsewhere throughout the country. Exemption boards claim their work would be much easier if aliens were drafted. Navy department clerks of draft age will not be exempted, Secretary Daniels has announced.

Provost Marshal General Crowder is at work on a final set of regulations for the mobilization of the selective draft army.

Examination of 40 men in half a day has proved an easy matter for District No. 5 doctors.

Examination of men included in the first call who are unable to get to their home precincts at this time may be made here. A Philadelphia man was examined here yesterday.

THIRD WARD LEADS

Enumeration Figures Show That 657 School Children Live There.

In the seven wards of the city, 2,928 children between six and 16 have been enrolled for the coming term by Enumerator S. B. Haney, who has just completed the work. There is no tabulated report giving the number of boys and girls separately but there are possibly more girls than boys.

The Third ward leads with 657 children, almost 200 more than the next highest ward, the Second. The Fifth ward runs third with 428. The Sixth is next with 393, the fourth has 378, the First 328 and the Seventh 272.

The figures given above are according to the ward lines as laid in the map of the city. They do not represent the children attending each ward building as these are equally divided among all the schools of the city. In some wards there are too many children for the school and in the First ward there is no school at all.

STEAMER'S SURVIVORS LEFT ON DECK AS U-BOAT DIVES

Cruel Prank of Submarine Commander Results in Loss Of 38 Men.

ONLY THREE ARE RESCUED

By Associated Press. LONDON, Aug. 8.—Thirty Americans were lost on the British steamer Bostan Prince, sunk on July 31 by a German submarine. One American is among the survivors.

The Americans who lost their lives were William Brissy or Hughes of Philadelphia; James Hewitt of Detroit; Thomas Gilmore of Meriden, Conn.; Ben Cahn, a negro, of Norfolk, Va. The sole American survivor is William Sell, a negro, from Jacksonville, Fla. The American consul at a British port today heard from his lips the story of the murder of the crew.

Thirty-eight of the crew of the steamer were drowned and three others were rescued by a patrol boat and taken to a British port. The survivors say the submarine shelled the vessel, after which the crew was ordered to take to the boats and go alongside the submarine. According to the survivors the Germans removed the lifeboats and clothing from all the crew except eight, smashed the lifeboats with axes, then re-entered the submarine and closed the hatches leaving the men on deck.

After travelling on the surface for several miles the U-boat submerged.

11 SPECIAL CARS CARRY PICNICKERS TO OAKFORD PARK

First Contingent of West Penn Employees Has Its Annual Outing Today.

Eleven cars took more than a thousand from here to the twelfth annual outing of the West Penn Railway and Power company employees at Oakford Park today. Three of the 11 cars carried Uniontown employees. Eight were loaded here.

The early men are picnicking today and next Tuesday, August 14, will be the outing day for the ladies. The office forces have been split up, those not going today to be relieved for the next outing. Employees from all over the West Penn system are attending.

Although the day seemed to be an ideal one early in the morning the sky was clouded about noon and rain threatened. The afternoon was filled with a line of sports, for which many prizes were offered. The same list of events will be held next Tuesday.

One of the big features of the day was a drawing contest, which did not come off until after the other events had been staged. On the cars every one was supplied with a numbered tag, and the lucky one drawn at the park won the prize.

There was evidence that there would be many contenders for the prize to be awarded the largest family present. A 50-pound sack of flour was the prize.

KAISER STORY STAYS

Chicago Board Will Not Permit Entry to Be Torn From Spellers.

By Associated Press. CHICAGO, Aug. 8.—The motion of Anthony Czarnecki to tear out of 330,000 public school spelling books a page entitled "The Kaiser in the Making" was defeated, 7 to 3 at a meeting of the school board here yesterday. The story is complimentary to the emperor.

By a similar vote, Mr. Czarnecki's motion "to report elsewhere" the names of parents who refused to let their children eliminate the page with its complimentary reference to the German emperor was lost. By "elsewhere" Mr. Czarnecki referred to the federal authorities.

The board granted a request of Superintendent of Schools Shoop to eliminate 40 pages including the offending page, from 70,000 spellers still in the hands of the board.

"Mrs. Emily Snodgrass, a trustee, declared that she thought such action would offend German-Americans of Chicago. Hisson came from the gallery at this point. Czarnecki in a hotly referred to the German emperor as the greatest murderer of all time.

The board is controlled by recent appointees of Mayor Thompson. The legality of its existence is being questioned in court by certain officers of the former board.

BRIDGE AT DAWSON MAY BE ELEVATED BY FIRST OF YEAR

Contractors Make Good Progress on Preliminary Concrete Work.

VIADUCT IS TO BE BUILT

Concrete Structure Over Dickerson Run Will Connect With Extension of Span Over Yough, Eliminating Bad Railroad Crossing There.

The National Construction Company of Pittsburgh, which has the contract to raise the Dawson-Dickerson Run bridge so as to eliminate the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie railroad crossing, is making good progress with the work. The placing of a large span over the railroad tracks will be the first big step in the contract. There will be 17 piers placed along the state road northwest of J. F. Black's store and five across Dickerson Run, between the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie depot and W. J. Reed's planing mill.

Piers No. 1 and 2 are completed and No. 5 will be finished this week. The piers and the entire viaduct will be of concrete. This is being prepared in large gasoline mixers, hoisted to the top of a 93 foot tower, and dumped into a trough, which carries it to the form.

The viaduct will be 24 feet wide with a pipe railing and will have a 12 percent grade. The bridge span, which will reach from the viaduct to the end of the present bridge over the Yough, will be 163 feet, six inches long and will be level. The elevation of the old bridge will start from the first pier on the Dawson side. This will be raised four feet, the second eight feet and so on to reach the new span over the railroad tracks. As fast as the spans are raised forms will be built under them and concrete poured in to make solid piers. The Dickerson Run end

MRS. DE SAULLES MOVED

Warden Takes Her From Cell to His Residence.

By Associated Press. CONNELLVILLE, N. Y., Aug. 8.—Preparations were well under way for the inquest which will be conducted here Thursday into the death of John L. De Saulles, famous Yale athlete, who was shot and killed at his Long Island home last Friday night by his former wife, Mrs. Blanca De Saulles, when he refused to turn their young son over to her care.

No move was made today by Henry A. Ueharth, attorney for Mrs. De Saulles, to have her removed to a hospital, although physicians who examined her at his request reported that she was on the verge of a mental and physical collapse. Sheriff Seaman admitted, however, that she had been transferred from her cell to the county jail to a more comfortable room in his own quarters. The door of the room will not be locked and no guard will be placed over her. Sheriff Seaman declared the prisoner had been removed from the cell on orders of Dr. Cleghorn, the jail physician, who was one of the doctors who examined her.

Efforts of Mr. Ueharth and Mrs. De Saulles to locate her son, for whom she calls almost constantly, have not been successful. It was reported, although the belief persists that he is at the home of a relative of his father at Westbury, Major De Saulles, the child's grandfather, said tonight that he was "too sick mentally and physically to discuss the case."

By way of outlining the prosecution of Mrs. Blanca De Saulles, District Attorney Charles Weeks, made a statement here today in which he said the murder had been carefully planned.

"If the murder was not premeditated why did Mrs. De Saulles go to her former husband's home carrying a revolver?" asked the District Attorney. "That the woman carried the weapon for protection is not true as she was accompanied by the taxi cab driver and her maid. The crime was not the impulse of the moment, but was prearranged. Her only motive in the visit was to shoot De Saulles."

Runk, pastor of the United Brethren church of Scottsdale, officiated, the ring service being used. The bride and her sister, Miss Myrtle Barnhart, who was maid of honor, were escorted in white satin and carried white roses. Raymond Trout, a brother of the bridegroom, was best man. Previous to the ceremony, Mrs. Trout sang "The Lord, the Rose, and You," and "I Love You." As the bride party entered the library, where the ceremony was performed, the bride chorus from Lohengrin was played by Miss Betty Newberg.

At 6 o'clock a wedding dinner was served. Covers for eight were laid at the bride's table, which was centered with pink and white asters. Smaller tables, from which the remainder of the guests were served, held bouquets of similar flowers. Ferns were effectively placed in the dining room and library. The bride was clock in the shoe department of Kobacker's store for some time and is well and favorably known. The bridegroom is a meat dealer in Uniontown and is well known in and about Scottsdale.

Mr. Trout and his bride left last night for Westernport and other points in Maryland. On their return they will be at home in Main street Uniontown. Out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. M. M. SEE SKY CRAFT

Waynesburg and Verona Residents All Excited.

By Associated Press. WAYNESBURG, Aug. 8.—An aeroplane passing over the east end of Waynesburg late Monday night created considerable excitement.

Residents of Verona were startled Monday evening by the appearance in the sky of what they said resembled two dirigible balloons. The first was seen at 6 o'clock and the second 10 minutes later. The crafts were sighted first in the vicinity of Hilton and they sailed rapidly over Verona at high altitude. Hundreds of workmen on their way home stopped to gaze at the unusual sight. Women and children rushed from their homes, many forgetting meals they had been preparing.

Some who viewed the balloons through glasses declared they could distinguish propeller wheels and could see men. Other observers with glasses said the balloons contained no propeller wheels and carried no passengers.

Here is one Connelville case of it. W. H. Lowe, 519 Tenth St., N. Y., says: "My kidneys caused me a lot of annoyance for about a year. I was bothered constantly by pains in the small of my back and I didn't have any control over the kidney secretions. I took treatments from two doctors, but didn't get relief. I learned of Doan's Kidney Pills, got a box and began taking them. They relieved me at once. This was a few months ago and I haven't had any trouble since." Price 50c, at all dealers. SICK WOMAN HAD CRYING SPELLS

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Bahant, Pa.—"I was all run down and weak inwardly. I had female troubles and nervous feelings and my head bothered me. I would often have crying spells and feel as if I was not safe. If I heard anyone coming I would run and lock the door so they would not see me. I tried several doctors and they did not help me so I said to my mother 'I guess I will have to die as there is no help for me.' She got me one of your little books and my husband said I should try one bottle. I stopped the doctor's medicine and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It soon made a change in me and now I am strong and I do all my work." AUGUSTUS BAUGHMAN, Box 89, Bahant, Pa.

The Indoor and the Outdoor Man. They signal the indoor and outdoor type of man. When a blizzard is beating against the door of the wind because it emphasizes the coziness of the fireplace and heightens his sense of protection. WHEN THE SOLDIER BOYS LEAVE

GOOD-BYE TO HER SOLDIER SWEETHEART

French Discovery Increases Strength— Rapidly Restores Nervous Energy— Puts Flesh on Bones of Thin People

Something over sixty years ago
Pelouze, a French scientist, discovered
a form of organic phosphorus which,
when taken into the human system,
was quickly converted into nerve tissue. Nearly half a century later, Robin, a distinguished French physician, began a scientific investigation
of the use of this organic phosphorus
and its effect upon the human system,
with results that amazed the scientific and medical world. Since then Professor Robin's opinions have received almost universal approval; among the great clinicians and recognized authorities to support him may be mentioned Sir James Barr, London; L. H.
Warner, A. M., Ph. C., M. D., formerly
bacteriologist of St. Catherine's Hospital, New York, and such noted
European investigators as Pasquale
Bulow, Delage, Bokay, and Valerdi.
Today physicians and hospitals everywhere recognize its merits by its use
in ever-increasing quantities and it is an admitted fact that in the treatment
of these ailments directly or indirectly
due to depleted nervous vitality, such
as neurasthenia, nervous weakness,
premature old age, insomnia, lack of energy, fatigue, reduced vitality, general weakness, thinness, etc., it is unequaled. It is, therefore, a matter of more than ordinary interest to all such sufferers to learn that in its pure unadulterated state this organic nerve
building phosphorus is now obtainable
from druggists everywhere in the form
of 5-grain tablets of pure Nitro-Phosphate at a cost so low as to be within the reach of everyone. One of these tablets should be taken with each meal and the results in many instances are little short of marvelous.
Dull eyes become bright, sleep is restored to the sleepless, the nerves regain their strength, thin people put on flesh and the whole system becomes charged with that strength, vitality
and energy which makes life so truly worth while.

NITRO-PHOSPHATE mentioned
above, is a preparation of such proven merit that the manufacturers offer to return the money to any user who is not entirely satisfied with the results obtained. It is sold in this city by all first class druggists.—Adv.

THE PARAMOUNT.

"THE MOTHER INSTINCT"—A
five act Triangle feature in which Margery Wilson has the leading role in support of Child Bennett. Is an interesting attraction today. With elaborate settings depicting a French
fishing village and the Latin quarter
of Paris, and a company of more than 200 players, the picture is one of the most interesting produced presented on the Triangle program for several months. The story concerns Eleanor Courtois, a fisherman's daughter in a little coastal hamlet of France, who goes to Paris and enters the gay reveries of the Latin quarter. Marie a sister of Eleanor, is in love with a young man of the fishing village but refuses to marry him on learning of
the disgrace her sister has brought upon the family. Eleanor too has a sweetheart and has given up on account of the scandal. The peculiar circumstances surrounding the death
of Raulo Berger, a worthless fellow
of the fishing village, and the evidence brought against Marie for his murder, eventually reveals the truth
that makes both girls happy and clears Eleanor's name of guilt. The settings of the picture are of the magnificent Triangle type. They include riotous cabaret and carnival
scenes in Paris and the picturesque life in the fishing village. A two reel Keystone comedy is included. Tomorrow, Mary Pickford, the idol of the screen, will be seen in "Madame Butterfly," a five act Paramount feature.

ORPHEUM THEATRE.

"SOME BOY."—The George Walsh
smile and the George Walsh personality once more combine with a corking story to make "Some Boy" an assured success. "Some Boy" is William Fox's newest photoplay and is shown today. In this production he shows his Georgetown uniform and also
his room at college is represented exactly as it was at college. "Her Hero,"
a good Christie comedy, will also be shown. Tomorrow William Russell
has an unusually interesting role in
"The Masked Heart." In this he portrays the character of Philip Grey-count, a young fellow of the fast
social set, whose easy conquests over unfortunate damsels of his class
have caused him to regard the "game
of warts" with contempt.

SHOT, FELL TWO MILES, YET LIVES

Corporal Hall of Lafayette Escadrille Describes Battle.

SAID "GOODBY TO LIFE"

Regained Control of Machine 600 Feet
From the Earth and Then "Everything Went Blank"—Fortunately He Landed Inside the French Lines and Was Only Slightly Wounded.

A letter received from James Norman Hall, corporal in the Lafayette
escadrille, who was wounded and brought down in a fight with half a dozen Germans in June, has been received in this country.

Mr. Hall is a town man who enlisted in the British army in London in August of 1914.

"About two weeks ago I met a whole nest of Germans, got shot
through the shoulder and am now in hospital, out of action for at least six weeks to come.

"It all happened on June 20—or was it the 21st? Twelve of us went out at 7:30 p. m. and were to patrol the lines
until 9:15. We were to have a rendezvous over Solers at 10:00 feet and then to divide into two groups of six machines each, one patrol going to one section of our front and one to another. I lost my patrol and so kept on by myself knowing that I would find them again sooner or later, as we had a particular, well defined sector to cover.

"Archies" Kept Him Busy.
"The 'archies' were keeping me
awfully busy. I had never had them burst so close to me before. For so many of them at once. They burst
when they are near, a sort of a 'woof-woof, woof,' which you hear quite plainly above the roar of your motor,
and the concussion on the machine
up and down in a very uncomfortable manner. I was between 11,000 and 12,000 feet up, and yet those German gunners were planting them awfully close. They got their work down to a science. By Jove, but they shot well!
However, in a machine that travels at 125 miles an hour you simply laugh at archies—until one hits you.

"The trenches are a wonderful sight
from the air, particularly during an attack. You see more of the detailed action, of course, and hear nothing. But you can see for miles and miles the long brown strip of ground that makes the firing line and the flashes of the guns and the shell bursts. There is a demonstrable fascination in seeing all this from an altitude of two miles, and to me—knowing, as I do, what it is like to lug the parapet under heavy shell fire—a horror in the sight as well. I went far down the line, so far that I could see Rheims and the tower of the Cathedral. Then I came back, keeping a sharp lookout all of the time, hitting my machine first on one side, then on the other, and whirling around like a cat trying to catch its own tail. One's greatest danger in the air is that of being pounced on by surprise. You hear nothing but the roar of your own motor and so keep twisting and turning
on your own track constantly.

Saw German Machines.

"Finally I saw six or seven machines
about five kilometers back of the German lines. I couldn't distinguish whether they were French or German and decided to go over closer to have a look, only to find out they were German machines.

"They all started for me. The nearest German and I opened fire about at the same instant. We passed each other like the wind and not more than twenty-five meters distant. Then my machine began to get peppered, and I felt a 'smack' in the shoulder as though some one had hit me with a club. It numbed my left side and arm and made me feel lops, so that I lost control of my machine, and it dived straight down with motor full on. You can imagine the speed. I fell a distance of a way before I could get the motor shut off. I strengthened out then but had fallen so fast that I was barely conscious.

"I started to fall again and said
'goodby to life,' for I thought I was a goner. But I made a great effort and struggled out again when only about 300 feet above ground. I thought to myself, 'Now if I can only hold on to my wits until I land!' Then everything went black, and I didn't remember another thing until I was on a stretcher
being carried over some trenches by a couple of fellows. Before me it was a relief to see those blue uniforms, to know that I was in the hands of friends. As it was, I fell right in a first line trench, not 300 meters away from the German line. Wasn't that luck?

My machine was badly smashed, for, as I have said, it landed itself without any except subconscious help from me, but I have nothing except bruises, nothing broken except skin. It is really a miracle that I wasn't killed in the fall.
'I've been decorated, externally, a croix de guerre with palm and the médaille militaire. I don't deserve them; honestly I don't. There are fellows at the American escadrille who have done far better service and who have received no medals. I do a foolish thing, get brought down, and they reward me for accomplishing nothing at all. That's justice for me. It's rather odd that recently I should have written
a short article deprecating the practice
of giving honors."

Father of the American Navy.
A native born Irishman that the members of his race are particularly proud of is Commodore John Barry.
"The Father of the American Navy,"
He was born in Wexford, Ireland, in 1745. His father put him on a merchant ship before he was twelve years
old, and at fourteen he was employed
on a ship sailing from Philadelphia.
He was a master of ships before he was twenty-one years old. When the Revolution began Barry was employed by congress to fit for sea the first fleet which sailed from Philadelphia. Barry commanded the Lexington, which captured the first British war vessel taken by a regular cruiser.
Blocked by a superior British fleet in
the Delaware, he landed with his sailors and marines and joined Washing-

RESPECT YOUR PROMISES.

Therefore Do Not Make Any Unless
You Can Keep Them.

Keep your promises, so don't make
any you can't fill.
Don't make any in conflict with agreements.
Neglecting the exact terms of a definite
promise is often a very serious
thing.

The keeping of promises in business
transactions is the "sheet anchor" in
the establishing of credit among one's business associates.

The world of business places great value on promises.
Not only in all business transactions,
but in everyday life, the keeping of promises should be looked after with care.

Whatever you do, keep your word,
for the man who breaks his promises
even in little things is sure to break
them in the more important ones.

It is a good plan when making a promise as to appointments, to jot
down in a memorandum book the man's name, so that no mistakes can be made.

It is a question of obligation that is not canceled until it is paid.
The man whose promise or word can be relied upon is the one whose influence is far-reaching in any community
or any business.

Keep your promises, so don't make
any you can't fill.—New York Mail.

MANNING A CANOE.

The Bow Paddler Should Be Both Cool
Headed and Skillful.

Contrary to the general notion about
the relative importance of those in a canoe's manning, the bow paddler stands first. Among Indian voyagers he is the captain of the crew. His will is law.

Not arbitrarily is a captain's power vested in the bow paddler. It is the outcome of experience, and the basis of it is skill. The advantage of a canoe
is this, that, being lighter in draft
than any other known craft, it can be taken into very shallow water.

And just here, accompanying this advantage, lies a danger which the bow man must be able by his skill to meet. It is his business to watch for and avoid obstacles—snags, "dead
heads," slightly submerged tree trunks
and shoals—and the last two are sometimes very difficult to see before one is almost upon them. But a bow man must be able to see them. Much is at stake, life itself even.

Especially in certain kinds of rapid running, it is his trained eye for nar-rowable water and his skilled hand quick to guide the boat into it on which the safety of the crew depends.—Outing.

An Unlucky Showman.
Punch and Judy originated in China
about 1,000 years before Christ. The Emperor Mr. of the Chow dynasty was one day making a tour through the empire when an entertainer named Yeh Shu was brought into his presence to amuse the ladies of his court.
During the performance the puppet
cast such significant glances toward
the ladies that the angered emperor
ordered the originator of the "puppet"
play to be executed.—London Answers.

Capos the Thing.
Capos are to be worn as much for fall and winter as they have been for spring and summer. Already the bearer ones are appearing. Never before,
probably, have there been really warmer capos than these capos come promise to be, with the some cases, two thicknesses over the back and sides.
Navy blue will continue to be the most popular color.

FIGHT FOR YOUR LIFE

Duty Demands
Robust Health

Fight to get it and keep it

Fight—fight day in and day out to prevent being overtaken by ill and sickness, keep wrinkles from marring the cheek and the body from losing its youthful appearance and buoyancy.
Fight when ill-health is coming with its pallor and pains, defects and declining power. Fight to stay its course and drive it off.

But fight intelligently. Don't fight
without weapons that can win the day
for without the intelligent use of effective weapons the pallor spreads and weakness grows and a seemingly strong man or woman oftentimes becomes a prey to ill after all.

You will not find this class of persons in the hypoferrin ranks. No unhealthy, dull, weary, listless persons in that line. It is a hale, hearty, robust aggregation of quick-stoppers who view life in a joyous frame of mind
and are mentally and physically equal to any emergency. Hypoferrin stands for sound body and sound mind—it is the invigorating tonic of the times
—powerful and unsurpassed as a health
restorer, vitalizer and health preserver.
Fight to get the vigor of a sound
body with hypoferrin or to stay the process of decay and restore health and strength—you win. This tonic of amazing, wonder-working properties
has been approved by physicians as a most potent and safeguard of health.
It is a thoroughly scientific preparation of the very elements necessary to tone up the stomach and nerves, to build strong, vital tissue, make pure
blood, firm flesh and solid, active, tireless muscles.

Hypoferrin contains those mighty
strength-producing agents, lecithin and iron, potentiated in a form best adapted to benefit the body and its organs. Its action is to build up the blood, to the blood in nine cases out of ten a run-down condition, sallow, pale complexions, feeble nerves, listless, frail bodies are due to lack of lecithin and iron potentiation in the system.

Strength, endurance, vigor, health and endurance depends upon a healthy and iron potentiated blood. A healthy, dependable nerve and a healthy stomach,
these you can meet life at any angle.

This wonder tonic, hypoferrin, which is
as perfect as science can get to nature,
meets every essential demand of the human organism. It is safe and sure and has been used by the most delicate of women. Hypoferrin means nature's own way of building up the blood, of strengthening the body and keeping the vigor and buoyancy of youth. The power and point way of restoring health is not needed by hypoferrin women and girls. Their blood, filled with nature's heavy stores, creates conditions that give firmness and grace to the body and
the glow of health to the cheeks.

No need of going through life sickly and always feeling miserable in this age of medical science. Put into you the springy snap and vigor that you need to meet the life into your body and mind that inspires
the confidence that you can confront the world on an equal footing with all.
Hypoferrin may be had at your druggist or direct from us for $1.00 per package. It is well worth the price. The Remedies Co., Cincinnati, Ohio.

UNCERTAINTY IS BASEBALL LURE

Full of Thrills For Both Players and Fans.

SURPRISES ARE NUMEROUS

Standings Show That There Have Been Many Upsets In Present Season. Timely Hit, Untimely Error and Ninth Inning Rally Put Spice and Variety Into the Game.

Baseball is popular for a good many reasons. It is a sport without a peer, for one thing, and it stands in a class by itself, because no other sport, with the possible exception of the English game of cricket, is anything like it. It is a sport for both players and fans. It is full of thrills and, above all, is wholly red blooded.

But one of the very biggest factors which contribute to the popularity of baseball is the uncertainty of the game. Every game of ball that is played bristles with uncertainties. Every season brings forth surprises, because players and teams no longer do the unexpected things. The fan can never be bored sure of anything in baseball, and the same applies to the player, the manager or the team.

The timely hit, the untimely error, the unexpected mental lapse of a player, the ninth inning rally and a hundred and one other things which happen on the diamond mark the uncertainty of baseball and put spice and variety into the game.

The present season has been a season of many thrills and many upsets to date. And if one stops to consider the original source of unusual interest in baseball this year—a year of war—it can all be traced to the fresh, uncertain nature of the king of pastimes.

Take a glance at the standings of the clubs in the two big leagues, and you will find the picture is somewhat jumbled up when compared to the "advance dope" you had when the season opened. The Giants, true to predictions, are proving a big factor in the National league this year.

Look at the heroes of 1914, the Boston Braves. Last season they figured strongly in the race for the pennant, and they were touted as the real contenders for the title in the East. But the Braves are away down there yawning around in the second division. The champion Dodgers were counted on for a better showing than they have made, and the Cubs and Cardinals have provided big surprises by giving the foremost pennant contenders a tough argument. A second glance at the Braves recalls the fact that they have produced two big surprises in three years.

In the American league the two Sox teams are living up to previous predictions. But the rest of the entrants have succeeded in knocking the props from under the dope pot that was put out to both as the curtain went up.

The unexpected showing of both seasoned and rookie pitchers, the battling feats of unheralded sluggers and the dismal work of others who were expected to shine all go to show just how little the baseball fan can depend on the grand old dope as it is handed up on paper.

Yeh, Storm, the old game is popular for a good many reasons, but no one predicted just what would happen this year, and no one will ever be able to do so.

FINES BY HICKEY.

Since Abolishing Double Umpire System He Has Been Very Successful. President Hickey of the American Association having abolished the double umpire system, is extremely busy finding disorderly managers and players. For a scrap in Kansas City recently Tinker and Joe Wagner were fined $50 each, while Mottola was penalized to the extent of $35. Bill Ghymer, manager of the Louisville club, who had an altercation with a rival player, was fined $50 and suspended for three days.

Subsequently Ghymer suffered a $100 fine and six days suspension for today kicking. Jack Hendricks, manager of the Rochester club, was suspended for three days for too much talking, while Roger Bresnahan, manager of the Toledo club, was set down for a similar period for verbally assaulting an umpire. Hickey says that he will continue sleeping on those until the disorder ends.

Toll of the Tidy Art.

No creature is more tidy than an ant, who cannot tolerate the presence of dirt on its body, says a writer in St. Nicholas. These little creatures actually use a number of real toilet articles in keeping themselves clean. A well known authority says their toilet articles consist of coarse and fine toothed combs, hair brushes, sponges, and even washes and soap. Their combs, however, are the genuine articles and differ from ours mainly in that they are fastened to their legs. The ants have no set time for their toilet operations, but clean up whenever they get soiled.

Jimmy McAleer No Blocker.

Jimmy McAleer, former player, manager and club owner in major league baseball circles, although too advanced in years to shoulder arms, proved he is no slacker by purchasing $10,000 worth of Liberty bonds. The ex-Washington player also is lined up in the service of Uncle Sam having been appointed a member of the corporation board of Maryland county, Md., in which is located his home, Youngstown.

Want Baseball Scores.

Baseball follows the flag. A New York correspondent of a London newspaper has received orders to cable daily the scores of all games in the National and American leagues and also the scores made by the Canadian teams in the International league. So now Americans are now in England—and more are arriving daily—that the British newspapers are trying to get special features to please them.

WOMAN TENNIS CHAMPION HOPES TO REGAIN HER FORM OF LAST SEASON

By WALTER TRUMBULL.
IN your game by you used to be
The girl of such rapid foot and
You would the goddess name and
And
We were proud to have you for our
But then your skill of hand decreased,
And all thought your brain
had faded
Daggoner, at the least,
When you moved out to Cin-cin-nati.

We mourned and said we were afraid
That something really was the matter
With that keen mind that used to aid.

The aim to fool the slugging batter.
But while we mourned you I our lonely
And of your sky piece were despairing
We came to find it was our domes
Which needed patching and repairing.

It now appears as our mistake,
And yet we surely had our reason
For doubting when we saw you take
A club which for a dozen seasons
Had been a laugh, a standing jest,
An object of profound derision,
And only finished, at its best,
The trailer of the first division.

From where a quiet most profound Once reigned there comes the sound of bustle
Where others faltered you have found
A way to make the Redoubt humble.

They have a power they never knew—
Of every spirit hope's a tenant,
And, Matty, we believe that you Will come day lead them to a pennant.

JACK BARRY SAID TO BE BEAN BALL PROOF

Gets His Offense Than Any Player
In Game.

Jack Barry, Mott's old shortstop, now managing the Boston Red Sox, is "bean ball" proof. Barry gets his offense than any other player in the game and never gets knocked out. Last season Jack got in the road of twenty-three fast ones and walked to first every time.

In the old days Hughie Jennings was considered the best man in baseball for being hit. With Hughie it was no art. Nearly every game Jennings would get on base in this way. He would carefully gauge the ball and while apparently trying to get away from it would manage to let it hit him a glancing blow. It didn't hurt, but it was effective in reaching first.

Barry says when he is hit it is never intentional on the part of the pitcher. Jennings never admitted that either until he was through with the game. Barry also goes further and says that as often as he has been hit he never knew a pitcher deliberately to attempt to "bean" him.

CUBS STILL STRONG.

Mitchell Says Team Will Not Be Contender in National Race. Although his pitchers have come back on him, Fred Mitchell of the Chicago Cubs says his team is yet a factor in the race.

the National league race. Season, of whom great things were expected, has gone back to the minors. Merkle and Doyle, who played glib edged ball early in the season, have had a slump. Mitchell is after now pitchers. When he gets them the Cubs will again show they are of championship caliber, he says.

Rambler Rose.

One of the loved roses of summer is the Rambler rose, which ramble about scattering its joyous self among hundreds of people in addition to those who grow it. Clambering over houses, both of rich and poor, it gladdens the eye of the tourist, and in great areas it wanders from its home vine to the rose lawns, but not rose possession; to the sick, to the weary, to the direct business folk, to whom it brings a bit of relaxation. The rambling rose of June, which ramble all over to the joy of every one—here's to the insect-less health of the Rambler rose, whether Dorothy Perkins, Pillar or whatever brand.—Newark News.

Athletes Need Aviators.

Athletes, including such men as have played games such as tennis, basketball, football and baseball, are among the very best material from which to pick the men who will make up the personnel of the American flying squadrons, according to B. M. Woods, dean of the school of military aeronautics at the University of California. They possess the essential qualification of a highly developed muscular co-ordination and quick judgment.

Stars Seldom Abuse Umpires.

If the time demand aggressive tactics toward umpires by players, why is it that Christy Mathewson, Ty Cobb, Hans Wagner, Walter Johnson and George Alexander have been the big drawing cards of baseball when none of them wastes any time in unprincipled abuse? There must be an answer to this query. But what is it?

ALTHOUGH Molla Bjurstedt, woman tennis champion, has met her equal in some of the matches she played this season, her admirers say that before the season is over she will be the undisputed national woman's tennis champion. Her game has been highly spectacular, but she has had many breaks against her.

JOHNNY EVERS A "CRAB"

JUST LISTEN TO THIS

THEY say that ball players are self centered and not big enough to do a turn for a fellow team. Wrong! Johnny Evers received a large feral on his Philadelphia club recently.

After the game Johnny personally carried the set to the Women's Homeopathic hospital at Twentieth street and Susquehanna avenue, where Bill Hinchman, the Pirates' outfielder, occupies a private room. He presented the flowers to Bill.

Bill fractured his leg in a game during the series between the Pirates and Phils.

And they call Johnny a "crab."

TENNIS IN WAR CAMPS.

European Prisoners Adapt Game to Conditions of Ground.

A new form of tennis has been developed in several of the European war prison camps and has grown popular with the men, who in the past have been accustomed to play the game upon either grass or clay courts. For the lack of a better name it has been called "sling tennis," which is fairly appropriate, as the ball or bag is thrown back and forth across the net without being permitted to touch the ground.

All that is needed is a stretch of ground level enough to run about upon and large enough to lay out a full sized tennis court. The markings and net are placed as usual. Either a soft ball without resiliency or a small bag filled with pebbles or beans is used instead of the regulation ball. The regular frame of a tennis racket is employed, but is strung with slack cord or gut, forming a pocket somewhat after the manner of a lacrosse stick.

The ball is served or returned with a swinging motion of the arm or wrist and is in play until it touches the ground either in or out of court. In other respects the play and count are the same as in tennis. The game is said to develop great speed and agility and has proved extremely popular among tennis players who are barred by local conditions from playing tennis in the usual manner.

Trap Shooter Breaks Record.

Phil Miller, a young professional trap shooter of St. Louis, made what is claimed to be a world's record at St. Joseph, Mo. When shooting the Western handicap preliminary he broke ninety-eight targets at a twenty-three yard handicap. Cal Waggoner of Duluth, Neb., took high honors in the Western special, missing only one target in 100. In the shoot-off for second place in the amateur section of the Western handicap preliminary M. H. McDaniels of Ruman, Okla., a Choctaw Indian, won with twenty straight breaks.

His Feat of Death.

Upon the recent death of a politician who at one time served his country in a very high legislative place a number of newspaper men were collaborating in an obituary notice. "What shall we say of the former senator?" asked one of the men. "Oh, just put down that he was always faithful to his trust."

A Long Walk.

In 1890-1 an American woman walked from San Francisco to Frank, in Alaska, New York City. With two male companions and two dogs she set out on Aug. 27, 1890; she took the ferryboat from San Francisco to Oakland, but walked all the rest of the long and weary way.

CANADA WILL FILL SOME OF ALLIES' BREAD BASKETS

Canada plans to feed more people this year than ever before. An interesting sidelight on what is being done to put every available acre of land to use is the following: Canada and possible under the plan this year, is given in the following: Canada statement from the land department of the Canadian Pacific railway: "We shall produce, over and above last year's crop, enough food to supply one million people for one year." Next to the crown the Canadian Pacific railway is the greatest land owner in the British empire, possessing approximately twelve million acres of land. Much of the land sold has been bought by Americans who, for various reasons, have not made the most of their opportunities for cultivating it. Circulars were sent to 7,000 American owners of Canadian farms in western Canada asking them to cultivate their land, and in most cases, virgin acreage. Two thousand owners have placed an average of 100 acres each under crop. Considering that two-hundred bushels of wheat per acre is a conservative estimate and that the average wheat yield for western Canada runs fifty-four bushels an acre, it is estimated that four million more bushels of wheat will be grown this year than last. Estimating five bushels of wheat to a barrel of flour, this represents 800,000 barrels of flour. Each barrel can be transformed into 250 loaves of bread, which gives a grand total of two hundred million loaves of bread, or food enough for one million persons for one year.

THE HILLMAN
By E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

John wished, and regarded her thoughtfully. "You're a queer little girl, Sophy," he said. "I don't know how to advise you."

"Of course you don't," she answered. "No one could. As for you, I suppose you will marry Louise. What will happen to you after that, I don't know. Perhaps I shouldn't care so much about London then. You've made it very nice for me, you know."

"You're made it beautiful even for me," he told her. "I often think how lonely I should have been without you to talk to. Louise sometimes is delightfully companionable, and kind enough to turn one's head. Other days I scarcely understand her; everything we say to one another seems wrong. I come away and leave her simply because I feel that there is a wall between us that I can't get over."

"There isn't really," Sophy sighed. "Louise is a dear. Considering everything, I think she is wonderful. But you are utterly different. She is very complex, very emotional, and she has her own standards of life. You, on the other hand, are very simple, very faithful and honest, and you accept the standards which have been made for you—very rigidly, John. What are you looking at?"

John's whole expression had suddenly changed. His eyes were fixed upon the door, his face was stern as a granite block. Sophy turned quickly around. The marble chandelier, with no other light in the room, was shining with much more than its usual brilliancy. Sophy clutched at the tablecloth. The newcomers were Louise and the prince of Sevre.

"I don't understand this!" John muttered, his lips twitching. Sophy glanced at nothing. Her cheeks were pink with excitement. Suddenly Louise saw John and Sophy. She stood still for a moment; then she came toward them, slowly and with little languidly. The prince was still studying through his eyeglasses the picture on which the head waiter was offering for his consideration.

"What an astonishing meeting!" Louise remarked, as she laid her hand for a moment on Sophy's shoulder. "What is going on behind my back?" John rose very slowly to his feet. He seemed taller than ever, and Louise's smile remained unaltered.

"The talk broke up my week-end party," he explained. "And I met Sophy in the Strand. In any case, I intended returning tonight. I understood that you would not be here until tomorrow about eleven o'clock."

"Those were my plans," Louise replied. "But, as you see, other things have intervened. Our little house party, too, was broken up by this abominable weather, and we all moved up to town. The Faradays have gone home. The prince heard from Miles that I was at home, and telephoned me to dine, Mr. Lott!"

John was struggling with a crowd of hateful thoughts. Louise was wearing a wonderful gown; her hair was wonderfully arranged; she had the air of a woman whose toilet was complete and perfect down to the slightest detail. The prince's show dress reflected them distinctly.

"It was my servant's fault, I suppose," he said. "I told him to ring up last night and order the table for two in that corner. However, we will take the vacant one near your desk."

He looked around and, as if for the first time, noticed Louise. He came toward them at once.

"The prince seems to have ordered his table last night," John remarked. His tone, even to himself, sounding queer and strained.

Louise made no reply. The prince was already shaking hands with Sophy. "I thought you were spending the weekend with my cousin, Strangeway," he remarked, turning to John.

"We did spend part of it together," John replied. "The weather drove us back this afternoon."

"I congratulate you both on your good taste," said the prince. "There is nothing more admirable than a river-side retreat out of season. We are taking the table on the left, Louise."

He led her away, and they passed down the room. John slowly resumed his seat.

"Sophy," he denigrated harshly, "tell me the truth. Is there anything between the prince and Louise?"

Sophy nervously crumpled up the toast by her side.

"The prince admires Louise, and has done so for many years," she answered. "No one knows anything else. Louise never speaks of him to me. I cannot tell you."

"But you must know," he persisted, with a little break in his voice. "Forgive me, Sophy. I made an ass of myself. First Lady Mithin, and then Graillet, and then—well, I thought Louise might have rung up to see whether I was at home, if she came back sooner than she expected; and the prince took the table last night!"

She leaned over and patted him on the hand.

"Don't worry," she begged. "If Louise has to choose some day between him and you, I don't think she'll hesitate very long. Don't look so stern, please. You look very statuesque and perfect, but I don't want to dine with a piece of sculpture. Remember that I am flailing you too attractive for my peace of mind. There's your text!"

He poured a glass of wine and drank it off.

"It'll do my best," he agreed. "If it seems like rubbish, you can still believe that I appreciate everything you've told me. You are pretty, and you are lucky to have you here. Now I'll try to make you believe that I think so."

"Go on, please!" she murmured. "Even if it hurts afterward, it will be heavenly to listen to!"

The next night Sophy acted as showman at the first production of the play, so long delayed because of Graillet's insistence on a scene that promised to be startling to English playgoers. Her part was over at the end of the first act, and a few minutes later she slipped into a seat by John's side behind the curtain.

"What do you think of it so far?" she asked a little anxiously.

"It seems quite good," John replied cheerfully. "Some very clever lines, and all that sort of thing; but I can't quite see what it's all leading to."

Sophy peered around the house from behind the curtain.

"There isn't standing room anywhere," she declared. "I don't suppose there ever was a play in London that was more talked about, and the putting it off for more than three months—why, there have been all sorts of rumors about. Do you want to know who the people in the audience are?"

"Not particularly," John answered. "I shouldn't know them, if you told me. There are just a few familiar faces. I see the prince in the box opposite."

"Did you telephone to Louise today?" Sophy asked.

John shook his head.

"No, I thought it better to leave her alone until after tonight."

"You are going to the supper, of course?"

"I have been asked," John replied, a little doubtfully. "I don't quite know whether I want to. Is it being given by the prince or by the management?"

"The management," Sophy assured him. "Do you come and take me! It's going to be rather fun."

The curtain went up upon the second act. John, from the shadows of the box, listened attentively. The subject was not a particularly new one, but the writing was brilliant. There was the old "Marquis de Guy," a ruse, a degeneration, but still overbearing and full of personality, from whose lips came some of Graillet's most brilliant sayings: Louise, his wife; and Faraday, a friend of the old marquis, and obviously the intended lover of his wife.

She Leaned Over and Patted Him on the Hand.

"I don't see anything so terrible in this," John remarked, as the curtain went down once more and thunders of applause greeted some wonderful lines of Graillet's.

"Try and bear the thread of it all in your mind. For two acts you have been asked to focus your attention upon the increasing brutality of the marquis. Remember that, won't you?"

"Not likely to forget it," John replied. "How well they all act!"

There was a quarter of an hour's interval before the curtain rose again. Rumors concerning the last act had been floating about for weeks, and the house was almost tense with excitement as the curtain went up. The scene was the country chateau of the "Marquis de Guy," who brought a noisy crowd of companions from Paris without any warning. His wife showed signs of dismay at his coming. He had brought with him women whom she declined to receive.

The great scene between her husband and herself took place in the square hall of the chateau, on the first floor. Louise reaffirms her intention of leaving the house. Her husband laughs at her. Her position is hopeless.

"What can you do?" he mocks. She shrugs her shoulders and passes into her room. The marquis sinks upon a seat, and presently is joined by one of the ladies who have traveled with him from Paris. He talks to her of the pictures upon the wall. She is impatient to meet the Marquis de Guy.

The marquis knocks at his wife's door. Her voice is heard clearly, after a moment's pause.

"In a few minutes!" she replies. The marquis resumes his illustration. His companion becomes impatient; the marquis has pledged his word that she should be received by his wife. An ancient enmity against the Marquis de Guy prompts her to insist.

The marquis shrugs his shoulders and knocks more loudly than ever at his wife's door. She comes out dressed for travel and is met by Faraday, who suddenly appears.

"You asked me what I could do," she says, pointing to her lover. "You see now!"

There was a moment's breathless silence through the house. The scene in itself was a little beyond anything that the audience had expected. Sophy, who had been leaning over the edge of the box, turned around in no little anxiety. She heard the door slam. John had disappeared!

He left the theater with only his hat in his hand, turning up his coat by instinct as he passed through the driving rain. All his senses seemed tingling with some nameless horror. The brilliance of the language, the subtlety of the situation, seemed like some evil trail drawn across that one horrible climax. It was Louise who had come from that room and pointed to Faraday!

He reached his room—he scarcely knew how—and walked upstairs. There he threw off some of his dripping garments, opened the window wide, and stood there.

He looked out over the Thames, and there was a red flare before his eyes. Stephen was right, he told himself. There was nothing but evil to be found here, nothing but bitter disappointment, nothing but the pain which deepens into anguish. Better to remain like Stephen, unloving and unloved, to draw nearer to the mountains, to find joy in the crops and the rain and the sunshine, to listen stonily to the cry of human beings as if to some voice from an unknown world.

He leaned a little further from the window, and gazed into the court at a dizzy depth below. He had cut himself adrift from the peace which might have been his. He would never know again the joy of his earthly life. It was for this that he had fought so many battles, clung so tightly to one ideal—for Louise, who could show herself to anyone who cared to pay his shilling or his half-guinea, glorying in her dishonor; worse than glorying in it—finding some subtle humor in the little gesture with which she had pointed, unashamed, to her lover.

John bent a little lower from the window. A sudden dizziness seemed to have come over him. Then he was forced to turn around. His door had been quickly opened and shut. It was Sophy who was crossing toward him, the rain streaming from her ruined opera cloak.

"John!" she cried. "Oh, John!"

She led him back to his chair and knelt by his side. She held his hands tightly.

"You mustn't feel like this," she sobbed. "You mustn't, John, really! You don't understand. It's all a play. Louise wouldn't really do anything like that!"

He shivered. Nevertheless, he stretched his hands and drew her closer to him.

"Do, please, listen to me," she begged. "It's all over. Louise is herself again—Louise Marrel. The Marquis de Guy never lived except upon these boards. It is simply a wonderful creation. Any one of the great actresses would play that part and glory in it—the very greatest, John. Oh, it's so hard to make you understand! Louise is waiting for you. They are all waiting for you. You are expected. You must go and tell her that you think it was wonderful!"

He rose slowly to his feet and caught at her hands roughly.

"Supposing I won't go," he whispered hoarsely. "Supposing—I keep you here instead, Sophy?"

She swung for a moment. Something flashed into her face and passed away. She was paler than ever.

"Dear John," she begged, "pull yourself together! Remember that Louise is waiting for you. It's Louise you want—not me. Nothing that she has done tonight should make her any less worthy of you and your love."

He strode away into the farther room. He reappeared in a moment or two, his hair smoothly brushed, his tie newly arranged.

"All come, little girl," he pouted. "I don't know what I'll say to her, but I'll come. There can't be any harm in that!"

"Of course not," she answered cheerfully. "You're the most terrible gooner John," she added, as they walked down the corridor. "Do, please, lose your travelling air. The whole world is at Louise's feet tonight. You mustn't let her know how absurdly you have been feeling. Tomorrow you will find that every paper in London will be acclaiming her genius."

"It's Louise You Want—Not Me."

John squared his shoulders.

"All the same," he declared grimly, "if I could burn the theater and the play, and look up Graillet for a month, tonight, I'd do it!"

CHAPTER XVI.

The days and weeks drifted into months, and John remained in London. His circle of friends and his interests had widened. It was only his relations with Louise which remained still unchanged. Always charming to him, giving him much of her time, favoring him, beyond a doubt, more than any of her admirers, there was yet about her something elusive, something which seemed intended to keep him so far as possible at arm's length.

There was nothing tangible of which he could complain, and this probationary period was of his own suggestion. He bore it grimly, holding his place whenever it was possible, by her side with dogged persistence. Then one evening there was a knock at his door, and Stephen Strangeway walked in.

Stephen, although he seemed a little taller and gaunter than ever, though he seemed to bring into the perhaps overwrought room something of the cold austerity of his own domain, had evidently come in no unfriendly spirit. He took both his brother's hands in his and gripped them warmly.

"I can't tell you how glad I am to see you, Stephen," John declared.

"It has been an effort to me to come," Stephen admitted. "I am one of the old-fashioned Strangeways. What I feel is pretty well locked up inside. The last time you and I met perhaps I spoke too much; so here I am!"

"It's fine of you," John declared. "I remember nothing of that day. We will look at things squarely together, even where we differ. I'm—"

He broke off in the middle of his sentence. The door had been suddenly opened, and Sophy Gerard made a somewhat impetuous entrance.

"I'm absolutely sick of ringing, John," she exclaimed. "Oh, I beg your pardon! I hadn't the least idea you had anyone with you."

She stood still in surprise, a little apologetic smile upon her lips. John hastened forward and welcomed her.

"It's all right, Sophy," he declared. "Let me introduce my brother, may I? My brother Stephen—Miss Sophy Gerard."

Stephen rose slowly from his place, laid down his pipe, and bowed stiffly to Sophy. She held out her hand, however, and smiled up at him delightedly.

"How nice of you to come and see your poor, lonely brother!" she said. "We have done our best to spoil him. I'm afraid he is a very homesick person. I hope you've come to stay a long time and to turn all about London, as John is doing. If you are half as nice as he is, we'll give you such a good time!"

From his great height, Stephen looked down upon the girl's upturned face a little awestruck. She chattered away, entirely unabashed.

"I do hope you're not shocked at my bursting in upon your brother like this! We really are great pals, and I live only just across the way. We are only just across the way, you know, that you are in the country. John brought you a message from Louise."

"About tonight?"

She nodded.

"Louise is most frightfully sorry," she explained, "but she has to go down to Streatham to open a bazaar, and she can't possibly be back in time to dine before the theater. Can you guess what she dared to suggest?"

"I think I can," John replied, smiling. "Say you will, there's a dear, she begged. 'I am not playing tonight. My sister is going on in my place. We arranged it a week ago. I had two lines to pay on Saturday, and I haven't had a decent meal this week. But I had forgotten,' she broke off, with a sudden note of disappointment in her tone. 'There's your brother, I mustn't take you away from him.'"

"We'll all have dinner together," John suggested. "You'll come, of course, Stephen?"

Stephen shook his head.

"Thank you," he said. "I am due at my hotel. I'm going back to Cumberland tomorrow morning, and my errand is already done."

"You will do nothing of the sort!" John declared.

"Please be amiable," Sophy begged. "If you won't come with us I shall simply run away and leave you with John. You needn't look at your clothes," she went on. "We can go to a grill-room. John shan't dress either. I want you to tell me all about Cumberland, where this brother of yours lives. He doesn't tell us half enough!"

John raised his arm through his brother's and led him away.

"Come and have a wash, old chap," he said.

They dined together at Luigi's, a purposely assorted trio—Sophy, between the two men, supplying a distinctly alien note. She was always gay, always amusing, but although she addressed most of her remarks to Stephen, he never once smiled. He ate and drank simply, seldom speaking of himself or his plans, and firmly negating all their suggestions for the remainder of the evening. Occasionally he glanced at the clock. John became conscious of a certain feeling of culpability, which in a sense Sophy shared.

"Your brother seems to me like a man with a purpose," she said, as they stood in the entrance hall on their way out of the restaurant. "Like a prophet with a mission, perhaps I should say."

John nodded. In the little passage where they stood, he and Stephen seemed to dwarf the passers-by. The men in their evening clothes and patled faces, seemed suddenly insignificant, and the women like dolls.

"For the last time, Stephen," John said, "won't you come to a music hall with us?"

"I have made my plans for the evening, thank you," Stephen replied, holding out his hand. "Good night!"

He left them standing there and walked off down the Strand, John, looking after him, frowned. He was conscious of a certain foreboding.

"I suppose," Sophy sighed, as they waited for a taxicab. "We shall spend the remainder of the evening in the usual fashion!"

"Do you mind?" John asked.

"No," she assented resignedly. "That play will end by making a driving idiot of me. If Louise is tired tonight, though, I warn you that I shall insist upon supper."

"It's a bargain," John promised. "We'll drive Louise home, and then I'll take you back to Luigi's. We haven't been out together for some time, have we?"

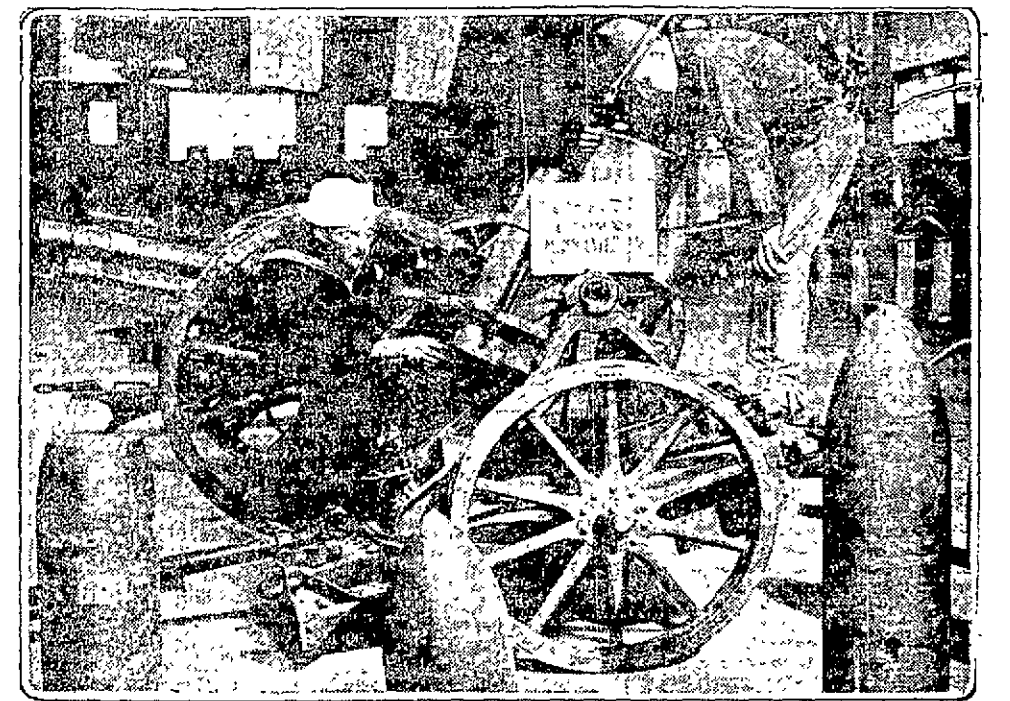

She looked up at him with a little grimace and patted his hand.

"You have neglected me," she said. "I think all these fine ladies have turned your head."

She drew a little closer to him and passed her arm through his. John made no responsive movement. He was filled with resentment at the sensation of pleasure that her affectionate gesture gave him.

The curtain was up and the play in progress when they reached the box that John had taken for the evening. The spell of it all, against which he

TAKEN FROM THE GERMANS AND USED TO REPULSE THEM, THIS PRIZE OF WAR IS DOING RECRUITING DUTY HERE.

CAPTURED GERMAN GUN NOW DOING RECRUITING DUTY HERE

Used during the early days of the war to aid the Germans in blasting their way through Belgium and approaching Paris, the gun shown above no doubt played an important role. When the Teutons were finally stopped on French soil and the allies began to push them back, almost inch by inch, this gun was captured, together with a large amount of ammunition. The tables were then turned, and the muzzle of this gun faced the opposite direction. Fate decreed that this "made in Germany" product should be used to slaughter Germans. Its presence here arouses the enthusiasm of all who wish to see Prussian militarism crushed, and it has proved a great aid to volunteer recruiting.

had so often fought, came over John's head. He set his chair back against the wall and stretched and listened, a certain sense of hypnotism creeping over his senses. Presently the same impulse which had come to him so many times before induced him to turn his head, to read in the faces of the audience the reflection of her genius. He had often watched those long lines of faces changing, each in its own way, under the magic of her art. Tonight he looked beyond. He knew very well that his search had a special object. Suddenly he gripped the arms of his chair. In the front row of the pit, sitting head and shoulders taller than the men and women who loomed over the wooden rest in front of them, was Stephen. More than ever, among these inappropriate surroundings, he seemed to represent something almost supernatural, a fabled and disapproving spirit sitting in judgment upon some modern and unworthy wasteness. His face, stern and grave, showed little sign of approval or disapproval, but John's apprehending eyes the critical sense was there, the verdict foredoomed. He understood as in a flash that Stephen had come there to judge once more the woman whom his brother adored.

The curtain went up again and the play moved on, with subtle yet inevitable dramatic power, toward the hared and dreaded crisis.

The play came to an end presently, amid a storm of applause. The pit figure in the front of the pit remained motionless and silent. He was one of the last to leave, and John watched his retreating figure with a sigh. Sophy drew him away.

"We had better hurry round," she said. "Louise is always very quick getting ready."

They found her, as a matter of fact, at the act of leaving. She welcomed them, naturally enough, but John fancied that her greeting showed some signs of embarrassment.

"You knew that I was going out to supper tonight?" she asked. "Oh didn't I tell you? The prince has asked the French people from his Majesty's to meet M. Graillet at supper. I am hurrying home to dress."

John handed her into her waiting automobile in silence. She glanced into his face.

"Is anything the matter?" she asked. "Nothing!"

"The prince would have asked you, without a doubt," Louise continued, "but he knows that you are not really interested in the stage, and this party is entirely French—they do not speak a word of English. An revoir! Sophy, take care of him, and mind you behave yourselves!"

She waved her hand to them both and threw herself back among the cushions as the car glided off. John walked to the corner of the street in gloomy silence. Then he remembered his companion. He stopped short.

"Sophy," he begged, "don't hold me to my promise. I don't want to take you out to supper tonight. I am not in the humor for it!"

"Don't be foolish!" she replied. "If you stay alone, you will only imagine things and be miserable. We needn't have any supper, unless you like. Let me come and sit in your rooms with you."

"No!" he decided, almost roughly. "I am losing myself, Sophy. I am losing something of my strength every day. Louise doesn't help as she might. Don't stay with me, please. I am beginning to have moods, and when they come on I want to be alone."

She drew a little closer to him.

"Let me come, please!" she begged, with a pathetic, almost childlike quiver at the corner of her lips.

He looked down at her. A sudden wave of tenderness swept every other thought from his mind. His mental balance seemed suddenly restored. He hailed a passing taxi and handed Sophy into it.

"What a selfish pig I am!" he exclaimed. "Anyhow, it's all over now. We'll go back to Luigi's to supper, by all means. I am going to make you tell me all about that young man from Bath."

She drew a little closer to him.

"I am greatly flattered," she told him. "You must please sit down and make yourself comfortable while we talk. See, this is my favorite place!"

She added, dropping into a corner of her lounge, "Will you sit beside me? Or, if you prefer, draw up that chair."

"My preference," he replied, "is to remain standing."

She raised her eyebrows. Her tone altered.

"It must be as you wish, of course," she continued; "only I have such pleasant recollections of your hospitality at Peak Hall that I should like, if there was any possible way in which I could return it."

"Madam," he interrupted, "you must admit that the hospitality of Peak Hall was not willingly offered to you. Save for the force of circumstances, you would never have crossed our threshold."

"I am very sorry, madam," she interrupted. "I am very sorry, madam," she interrupted.

She shrugged her shoulders. She was adapting her tone and manner to the deliberacy of his attitude.

"Well?"

"You want to know why I have found my way to London?" he went on. "I came to find out a little more about you."

"About me?"

"To discover if there was anything about you," he proceeded deliberately, "concerning which report had been made. I do not place my faith in newspapers and gossip. There was always a chance that you might have been an honest woman. That is why I came to London, and why I want to see your play last night."

She was speechless. It was as if he were speaking to her in some foreign tongue.

"I have struggled," he continued, "to adopt a charitable view of your profession. I know that the world changes quickly, while we, who prefer to remain outside its orbit, of necessity lose touch with its new ideas and new fashions. So I said to myself that there should be no mistake. For that reason I sat in a theater last night almost for the first time in my life. I saw you act."

"Well?" she asked almost defiantly. He looked down at her. All splendid self-assurance seemed ebbing away. She felt a sudden depression of spirit, a sudden strange sense of insignificance.

"I have come," he said, "if I can, to buy my brother's freedom."

"To buy your brother's freedom?" she repeated, in a dazed tone.

"My brother is infatuated with you," Stephen declared. "I wish to save him."

The woman's courage began to assert itself. She raised her eyes to his. "Exactly what do you mean?" she asked calmly. "In what way is my man to be saved from me? If your brother should care for me, and I, by any chance, should happen to care for him, in what respect would that be a state from which he would require salvation?"

"You make my task more difficult," he observed deliberately. "Does it amuse you to practice your profession before one so ignorant and so unappreciative as myself? Is my brother's should ever marry, if it is my firm intention that he shall marry an honest woman?"

Louise sat quite still for a moment. A flash of lightning had glittered before her eyes, and in

CHURCHMEN ALLIED WITH LEGISLATORS TO GIVE LIQUOR A KNOCKOUT BLOW

Inauguration of a $1,000,000 advertising campaign against the liquor traffic in the "wet" states was announced by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America,
whose general secretary is Rev. Dr.
Charles S. MacFarland (No. 4 in the pictures). It will be known as the "Strengthen America" campaign, and
the purpose is to prove in the advertising columns of newspapers that

strong drink must go.
Rev. Charles Steitz (No. 3 in the pictures) is the campaign manager.
He said that because of the recent action of the United States Senate in passing a national prohibition amendment to the constitution (which must be passed by the House of representatives by a two-thirds vote and then ratified by three-fourths of the states) it had been decided to make known the plans of the council earlier than had been intended. Senator Morris Sheppard of Texas (No. 5 in the pictures) is the author of the amendment, which was strongly supported by Senator Wesley L. Jones of Washington (No. 1).

Senator William J. Stone of Missouri (No. 2) was one of the strongest opponents to the prohibition amendment.

NOTED PASTOR WILLINGLY GIVES AN ENDORSEMENT

Rev. Jonah Smith Says Tanlac Relieved Him of Kidney Trouble.

The Rev. Jonah Smith, Ph. D., chief
clerk in the Department of Public Safety of the city of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and one of the best known and
most respected citizens of that community, said recently:

"I suffered from kidney trouble for over six years. Often when I would sit down for any length of time I could hardly rise from the chair because of the severe pain in my back,
which seemed to hold me rigid. When I would stand for a time I got the same pains right in the small of my back. This condition caused me much suffering."

"I read of the wonderful relief local people had got through taking Tanlac, so I decided to try a bottle.
I noticed that it was benefiting me
after taking only one-half of the bottle. I have now finished three bottles and at the present time I suffer not at all. I can sit down without fear of pains and I can stand for any length of time without suffering
any ill effects. In fact, I spent eight days in camp with the First Regiment
of Patriotic Order Sons of America
and participated in all the drills without suffering from any pains, thanks
to Tanlac."

"I now recommend Tanlac because I found it exactly as represented to me."

Tanlac is now being introduced
here by the Conneville Drug Co.
Tanlac can also be secured in Dunbar at D. C. Eason's Drug Store.
